How has youth violence affected my life?
Youth violence affected my life because I don’t know if someone I love or care for is going through youth violence. It could affect my life because it could be happening in my community and I won’t know it. It also affects my life because in my childhood, you don’t even want to think about that. It gives me a personally miseducated and spiritual feeling to match my loss in my faith of the importance and the growth of humanity. I think that it will affect my school performance, and it will properly make me feel afraid, unsafe, sad, and nervous about school and make me lose myself confidence. Sometimes people think suicidal thoughts that will make them go crazy. Sometimes I would think... about what if the world wasn't such a bad place to live in. I think that it will make kids or people think more of what is good in life instead of bad. People will probably stop smoking and drinking and using drugs. It will make the world have it's peace. It will affect my feelings toward people and toward mankind. It will affect my thoughts that I have toward people not only myself. It will make my life harder to live for me and my family. Sometimes I can't go outside pass my curfew and I could go only some places, but I have to be with an adult or someone that is 16 or older and my parents know.

Youth Violence not just affected me it has affected other young children and adults. When someone I know is going through youth violence I pray to God that Nothing bad will happen to him or her. I just want to know that they are going to be okay and that their fate is not going to be in a coffin and buried into the ground.

What are the causes of youth violence?

The causes of youth violence is when children learn at an early age, the development of the values of being perceived and aggressive.

"When they are young, the "roughhousing" one might see on a playground or in a backyard allows children to develop affiliations with other, helps them select their friends. It makes them learn their place in the natural dominance hierarchy and helps them develop what are often very useful fighting skills. It does not mean that children who engage in this behavior, whether it is physically or verbally I'm not sure how bad you need it. I think it's best to let the doctor decide. I heard there's a new medicine that helps with this. It's called Levothroid. You might want to talk to your doctor about it. They can tell you if it's right for you. Good luck!
aggressive, intend to carry out any "Treats" they may make in this process of identity developments. It is only when this "rough and tumble" behavior persists in pursuit of outright domination that it becomes a problem," says School of Education.com. I think that the real problem is that when kids at a very young age start to learn things that they should not know at that age. Then when he/she grows older and then takes that anger that he/she has in them and takes it out on other people. That's why so many kids and people have problems.

What can I do about youth violence?

What I can I do about youth violence?

What I can do about youth violence is try to help people deal with the youth violence and tell them that it's not right, and that you should try to clam down when you have your moments. I would give money to programs that help stop youth violence. If I know a foundation that helps stop youth violence and I had the I would give 1,000 dollars to that foundation. But since I don't know a foundation, I will try to talk to some people about it, and if I could I would put up posters saying "STOP YOUTH VIOLENCE IT'S NOT RIGHT." If I know someone that is going through youth violence I would talk to them and tell them that they should talk to a therapist.
