Violence affected my life by making my best friend get kicked out of school. One morning my friend got into a fight with another kid. They were throwing punches left and right. My friend even needed him in the stomach eventually teachers came to break it up. My friend whose name was Michel was thrown out of school for seriously hurting a kid of course this was in the 4th grade. The kid he beat up was really hurt and was out of school for a month. While the fight was going on everyone was screaming “fight fight fight”, and instigating I was mad because out of all the kids there no one came in to help him.

I couldn’t do anything because I was too small if I stepped in I would of got really hurt. After that day I never saw Michel ever again. If I had a little more confidence I would have helped him. I wonder how Michel is and how he is doing. the next day they had a talk to all his friends to see how to fight started but I never found out. I wanted to know what caused it was he mad or did someone else bother him. It affected my life because I lost my best friend. I could have helped him by having a talk with him and resolve this problem. I really miss him but I know he has changed and become a better person. I hope I could have see Michel again it would be really nice if I meet up with him and we catch up on what we are doing I hope we can go to see the kid he beat up and apologize to him and resolve all of this. I think the cause of youth violence is what they watch on tv and if they have a bad temper if they see someone else do it they might think it is cool and they might try it and may really hurt someone.

I could help kids with anger problems by setting up a counselor at school to help them with their anger and make sure that violence never affects their life again. I could help them by showing them how life is better with no violence affecting them they could live a happy life and I could help Michel with his problem. That fight that Michel got into could have been resolved by a little talk and help. That is how violence affected my life.
