How does violence affect my life?

Violence has an effect on my life in different ways. It hasn’t affected me directly because none of my close friends or relatives has encountered something associated with physical violence or something dangerous. It affects me because whenever I watch something on the television or a movie about violence it actually worries me. I wouldn’t want to go outside with my friends because I would get scared of all the bad things around the neighborhood. Bullying is something else that worries me. Although it may not happen to me often, it happens to thousands of kids around the world daily.

Did you know that people get more violent each and every day? Studies suggest that violent people come from a dysfunctional family with abusive mothers or fathers. But some other violent people come from functional, wealthy families; but they might have a short temperament they think the only way to solve problems is by violence. But we know that violence is not the answer. Most criminals, I assume, don’t think while they’re committing the crime, but they think after the crime has been committed. But what has been done cannot be undone. Violence has a domino effect, because when it affects one person it can have an effect on the whole neighborhood or community.

Youth violence is also considered bullying, slapping, hitting or even more emotional harm than physical harm. It also includes robbery and assault. According to: http://www.adherents.com/misc/violence.html the top ten causes of youth violence are the media, substance abuse, gangs, unemployment, weapons, poverty, peer pressure, broken homes, bad neighborhoods and intolerance or ignorance.

Youth violence can have many different aspects (gangs, bullying etc.). Sometimes it can be caused by neglect by parents, and that can get their children to go with the wrong crowd. Sometimes they get into gangs just to fit in and have it feel like a family because of neglect by their parents. The environment, in which the person grew up in, plays a very big factor in his or her participation in violence. For example, if he or she grew up in an environment where violence seemed to be a part of daily life, the person will grow up thinking it’s okay to commit crimes like that. Another example is if a young boy grew up seeing his father hurting his mother, it can lead to two things. It can lead to him adopting the same attitude towards women and it can also lead him to developing anger against men who hurt women. There’s more juvenile delinquency now than there was in the past. Today, young adults tend to blame their parents more for their own bad choices and they are becoming more aggressive. According to the youth today they think that the media is one of the greater affects to the youth violence today. They think that the media can sometimes portray violence as something sort of benefiting when in reality it’s not. They also say that peer pressure is another cause. Sometimes
How do I make a mallet?

Mallets, which are typically used in percussion instruments, are tools that are designed to strike the surface of a drum or other percussion instrument. They are made from a variety of materials, including wood, plastic, and rubber, and can be used to produce different sounds and effects.

To make a mallet, you will need the following materials:

- A wooden dowel or pole
- A piece of rubber or plastic
- A hammer or mallet-making tool
- Sandpaper or other abrasive material

Instructions:

1. Choose a wooden dowel or pole that is the length and diameter you want your mallet to be.
2. Cut the dowel to the desired length and smooth the edges with sandpaper to ensure that they are not sharp.
3. Choose a piece of rubber or plastic that is large enough to cover the end of the dowel. This will be the head of your mallet.
4. Use a hammer or mallet-making tool to secure the rubber or plastic to the end of the dowel. Make sure that it is secure and will not come off easily.
5. Test the mallet by striking a drum or other percussion instrument. Adjust the weight of the mallet to achieve the desired sound.

By following these instructions, you will be able to make a mallet that can be used to produce a variety of sounds and effects in your percussion ensemble.
a friend will encourage you to do something bad like stealing something or even smoking.

To help stop youth violence I would help other kids my age by involving them in workshops or activities and talking to them. I think that would help because maybe that will inspire them to get influenced and motivated by good things and not bad things. I would also help them by getting them maybe a counselor they can talk to because they might have psychological trauma from their childhood. I would also try to involve the parents so they know what their child is doing outside of school. A child can be excellent in school and have polite manners, but when he or she hangs out with the wrong people, they become influenced. That’s where peer pressure comes from. But not only one person can help end it. We need to unify and help end youth violence together.
