Have you ever seen violence or had it in your family? Well, violence is not something you want to see everyday, and it definitely doesn't solve any problems.

When I was little my grandfather died because of violence. He was a man who served our country, he was in the army. He in training one day and they were in the woods. My grandfather had been hiding when he was hit. The impact made him fall back. Behind him was a hill with many branches along the way. He fell down the hill and hit his head. He was rushed to the hospital and my grandmother got the call. As soon as she found out she rushed to the hospital to see him. When she got there, they told her what happened and that he hit his head but other than that he only had a few cuts and bruises. My grandmother asked if he was gonna be okay and the doctor said that she didn't know because head injuries are very unpredictable.
I have a very close relationship with God. I feel strongly about my beliefs and try to live by my principles.

When I was little my grandmother told me that the story of Jesus in the Bible is a moral guide. She also taught me about the importance of love and kindness.

I'm reading a book on philosophy called "The Power of Giving." I'm finding the stories of people who have made a difference inspiring.

The cell phone is a tool that we use to stay connected. I'm used to the technology and find it very helpful. My smartphone allows me to access the internet, make calls, and keep in touch with friends and family.

I'm working on a project about climate change and am trying to find ways to reduce my carbon footprint.
able. She had waited there with him right by his side until she heard a consistent beep and knew he was dead. She was heartbroken and so were her kids. (mom and aunt)

My grandmother always tells me stories about how he supported his family and how he was such a nice man. She always told me he would love me so much because I was so much like him. He held me once and that was the last time I saw him. It makes me sad I never got to formally meet him but, I know he is in a better place now and that everything happens for a reason.

All I have to say is losing someone is hard but you will get through it once you realize there are other people to love you, he/she is always there in your heart and they are in a better place now.

R.I.P grandpa! I miss you!
My doctor ordered some tests for me, one is a balance test, and another is an MRI scan. The results are to be discussed next Monday. I have a friend who works at the hospital, and he said that the tests will be done on Friday. I'm a little nervous about it, but I'm also excited to get some answers.

If I have to stay, I will probably sleep at the hospital. My boss has been very understanding, and he said that I can take as much time off as I need. I'm grateful for his support and understanding.

I've been feeling a bit down lately, and I'm not sure if it's just the weather or something else. I've been trying to stay active, but it's been tough. I've been thinking about going for a walk, but the rain has been keeping me indoors.

I don't want to make any big decisions right now. I'm just trying to figure out what's going on with my body. It's been a challenging time, but I'm trying to stay positive. I know that everything will be okay in the end.
