Violence Essay

Violence is everywhere in our daily lives. Sometimes it is noticeable, and sometimes it is not. There are many causes for violence, as well as effects of it. In this essay I will be discussing the multitude of causes and effects of violence.

As we all know, there are countless causes of violence. These causes vary from revenge to someone making a snide remark to someone else. If a person was to make an unwanted and unnecessary remark to another about a serious topic, that person might not act kindly upon it. They might want to hurt whoever said the remark because it is a serious matter. They might have made fun of a dead relative. Another cause for violence is a difficult home life. If a person has a difficult life at home, they might want to take it out on others, this is also known as bullying. Since the person does not like his or her life at home, they will want to express their pain to others. Bullying is one of the most common types of violence in our world today. A bully related type of violence is self violence. This is when a person inflicts damage to his or her self. This usually occurs when someone does not like their life and believes the pain helps them deal with their problems. Self violence is usually common when a person is being extremely bullied at school.

Gang rivalry is also another common cause of violence. There may be one group of individuals that do not like another. If these two groups dislike each other enough, then they might start hurting one another. This is also known as gang rivalry. A sometimes looked over cause of violence is an undesired working environment. This is when a person does not like the way he or she is treated in their working area. This can also mean that someone dislikes their job so much that they act violently because of it. If someone is treated poorly at their job by their boss or their coworkers, they might take matters into their own hands. There are numerous possibilities to what they might do, all depending on how they are treated at work.

All of the types of violence above may have numerous effects. Despite this fact, I will only cover a few effects, and not all. When someone decides to do something to you due to a snide remark you made, you will most likely not want to comment on anything again. This is because someone hurt you because you commented on their pain. Another possible effect is you want to get revenge, which is never good. If you are being bullied, your trust for fellow students will start to dwindle. It will sometimes do this because you are being bullied by fellow students. Another effect of bullying is switching schools, which very common in the student/bully life.

Gang rivalry has many effects. These gang rivalries will usually affect those around it. If these gangs start using guns, then there is a very high chance of innocent people getting shot. If the amount of gang battles increase then so will the probability of an innocent person getting shot. An undesired work environment may vary in effects. Usually, the main person’s coworkers will be affected. They might get shot or beat up. Another effect is that the person who has the undesired work environment might get fired due to what he did. If he gets fired, it will show on his record, so he will most likely not get hired again.

The final effects of violence that I will be covering are for self violence. For this type of violence, there are also many possible effects. The most common effect for this type of violence is body damage. If you are hurting yourself in any way, you are causing your body visible damage. When you have visible scars on your body that people can see in public, they will start to stare. This is another effect of self violence. When you stop hurting yourself, you still have reminders of your damage. If you are in public, people will stare at your damage. Although they don’t know that it is self inflicted, they start to assume things. The final effect of this type of violence that I am going to discuss is self death. When someone hates their life so much they try to take matters into their own hands and end their life that is extreme.

In absolutely no way am I saying that these are the only types of important violence. I am also not saying that these are the only important effects of these types of violence. In this essay, I covered the causes and effects of violence that I thought were the most important in this topic.
