Inspirational Leaders

Violence is bad and it could hurt people physically or mentally. The definition of violence to me is hurting someone or making him or her feel bad. Violence has affected my life by making me see a different view of the world. The causes of youth violence in this world can cause people to be depressed or physically disabled. Kids in this world could change violence by stepping up and helping out other kids. If you ever experienced violence and you feel depressed, you should tell a person and speak up.

Violence in this world is bad. Violence is brought up many times in war. People get killed and family members of those people that get killed become sad. I always watch the news because it talks about violence. I become worried when people get hurt or shot because it is not fair to them. Malala Yousafzai was from Pakistan and was an education activist. Girls weren't allowed to go to schools in Pakistan and she tried to take a stand. She wrote blogs about schools getting destroyed and how she wanted the independence for girls to go to school. When the Taliban found out, she got shot in the head. The United Kingdom saved her and healed her. I think people could learn from this by taking a stand and never giving up on their dream no matter who discourages them.

Another great leader that changed racism by a lot was Martin Luther King Junior. He was an African American and was an inspirational leader for both black and white races. He used non-violence protests against white people because he believed that violence was not the answer to getting what you want. He was a reverent and he also got the Nobel Prize Award. He was also famous for his "I have a Dream" speech in Washington D.C. Martin Luther King Junior was a civil rights activist. Black people weren't allowed to sit at the front of busses in 1950s and if you do you got jail. Rosa Parks, another famous leader, one time never got up from a seat for a white man and got arrested. Martin Luther King Junior got an idea and led a boycott on busses. Black people never went on a bus until they got their equal rights and then they won against the white people. Martin Luther King Junior is a role model for many people in the world because he changed history for many people including all races. He changed my life because I figured I shouldn't go on with violence if I'm against another person.

This great leader wanted to take the troops to Afghanistan and kill Osama Bin Laden. This person is Barack Obama, the president of United States currently. He is an inspirational leader because he tried hard to achieve his dreams and never let go. He talks about how violence is never the answer to things and disagrees with all signs of it. Examples of violence that he disagrees with are bullying, drugs, alcohol, etc.
