Youth Violence Essay

Violence is very strong and it’s very bad being surrounded by it. Violence affects my daily life because there is always something bad or negative around trying to increase violence these days. Violence doesn’t only affect me but it affects the whole community to have to hear, see, or even listen about different tragedies there is happening every day. Violence can hurt others emotionally or physically. The causes of youth violence we have these days are students and kids in depression, stress, or feeling powerless. These factors cause the student to act in frustration. Youth violence can also be in home environments. In homes there could be negative relationships and frightening things happening around the student. The actions of what students see at home are more likely to do it outside too, and be abusive or rude to others around them. Youth violence can not only be in homes, it can also be in school or in the community as well. Students can learn to be violent with other peers too. Weapons are also causes of youth violence because many students have their hand on one, for their safety and even might use it to shoot someone. Attention also leads to youth violence because the student wants others to pay attention to the student, which can also be negative attention.

I am confronted by violence in my school and in my neighborhood. The types of violence there is in schools is that there is spreading rumors which people find out, and rumors leads into fights or negative comments about each other. The violence in my community affects many people around them too. The types of violence that there is in my community is that there is smoking, drinking and bullying. Community violence can hurt or kill a person emotionally by having bad examples surrounding them. Types of community violence are drug abuse, poverty, unemployment and access to guns and weapons. These are all bad factors that cause the community to react in a negative way.

As me, an individual person could do to reduce youth violence in my community is always having a positive attitude towards others. Helping each other out as a big community is a part of being a community. It’s important to have a positive community because it is important to keep everyone safe, healthy and happy. What I can do to reduce youth violence in my community is to talk to my coach and teachers about having a day or a program about youth violence around the community or schools, and teaching how the students can help in their individual environments by spreading the word to keep it healthy and safe for everyone. There can also be programs to the ones who like to talk individually with a person who could help that’s really in need and strongly being affected by youth violence in a negative way around their daily life. If everyone comes together and helps out and make a difference, everyone could help out to reduce having youth violence around the community. If that’s a good idea, it can make a positive change into the community so everyone could have a safe, happy and friendly life around their community and still prevent youth violence around everyone.
