Do The Write Thing

What are the causes of youth violence?

The causes of youth violence is mainly being bullied, your friends, and your family problems. Being bullied can lead to youth violence because if a kid is getting bullied physically such as getting punched, pushed, slapped and etc. it could lead to youth violence. One of the kids might actually end up getting seriously hurt.

A way your friends can cause youth violence is, one peer pressuring you into fighting someone or a bully. Two is if you have the wrong friends that like violence and want you to be a part of it with them. So now can see that your friends can lead to youth violence if you have the wrong ones.

Your family problems can cause youth violence if maybe your parents are getting a divorce or if you are in a situation where your family was constant violence in their life.

Those are the causes of youth violence.

How has violence affected my life?

I had never had violence in my life ever.
Dear [Name],

I'm writing to express my concern about the current situation. As you know, [describe the concern].

I believe that [suggest solution or action].

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
What can I do about youth violence?

Here are some tips:
The first thing I can do is tell you that stay away from it as much as you could. Even though I have never had youth violence affect me in my life, I know that some people have so just try to stay away from violence.

Also, stay away from people that cause youth violence and don't become one of them.

These are two main tips I can tell you about. I want to do to help you with youth violence!