Violence affect a lot people around the world. Here is how violence affected me when I was in second grade. I was late for class so I scurried through the hallways. When I got to the hallway where my class was, I found the girl Thamar who detested me because I won the class spelling bee when she got first place. She hated me from that day on. I tried to move away from her but she pushed me and said, "Look at the girl listens but do not know anything. Or should I say is stupid." I wanted to curse at her but I knew she I would get in trouble. So I ran halfway to my class until she pushed me called me a wimp and a punk then started talking about my family in swears. This made me feel angry because I could not do nothing plus I never like it when people talks about my family in a negative way.

Well to me this violent experience happened to me because about jealousy and hate. And I also bet that Thamar wanted to do this for over a dumb ribbon I won. There are a lot of ways that violent things happen in my neighborhood. One way is if there are kids playing basketball and someone win but others say he or she cheated and they all beat that person up. This is that someone is getting mad for something that isn't really true then it is for no reason to fight. Another way is when you and your friend get mad over a simple thing like a doll who should play with it and who should not play with it. The last way is when you and an enemy are verbely fighting because of hatred. These things happen to kids like me all over the world because of hatred and anger.

Young people around the world are getting bullied. Now all of us young ones have to put an end to violence. One thing my community could have done to avoid my violent experience is by speaking up. Speaking up could help kids stop getting bullied and not to be a bully because then we kids could live the way we want and how we are supposed to live. The way I can help stop violence between young people is that I would organize a run and make signs saying, "no bullying". I would even knock on my neighbors door and have a talk with them about how bullying affected them then write a document about it. When I see or hear about something violent, I would tell the nearest adult I know, This is called speaking up. What I would say to young people who solve their problems with violence is to stop because if that person had siblings then they will think that violence is okay. You should always show people that violence is never good and use your words in a very kind way that people know what you are trying to say and might leave you alone. And solving your problems with violence then you are leading yourself into the wrong path.
