Youth Violence

Youth violence hasn’t affected my life, but it has affected my community. Youth violence starts by bullying, gangs, and false rumors. All of that causes this violence we have in this world. All of this violence also makes the world an unsafer environment.

I think that the only way to stop all of this mess is to be the bigger person by staying out of it. Stay out of things even if the people around you think that’s weak. What’s weak is letting this nonsense spread around. To make a change in the world, you’ve got to step up and be the one to create the change.

There’s also other ways to stop youth violence. Another way is to speak up. Speak up and tell someone you know will help you end your problems before it’s too late. Tell an adult though, or someone who’s experienced what you’ve been through, or understands you. Tell somebody who’ll stop the violence. Not start some more!
You can also try by not being the one creating the bullying and false rumors. If you're the one starting problems, you'll be the one that'll end up losing to your own game. If you DON'T start the problems and ignore the people who starting one, you won't have to face the violence that pops out in our daily lives.

We've got to stop this violence. We've got to because it'll get out of hand and next thing you know, this whole world is full of violence. Maybe not even YOUTH violence will fill this world! This violence will affect people all around. All of our loved ones could also be tossed into the violence that's quickly spreading around too. So to react and together we'll make it through, through the violence that's destroying me and you.

We don't confront, we won't succeed in making a change to stop this violence! All we've got to do is confront the person you've got problems with and stand up for yourself. Stand up in a way that let's them know you don't want to end things with violence. You want to end it with no even a punch to the face. Also you wouldn't be giving a good influence to the ones around you. You'll make the younger ones think violence is always the answer. Violence never was, is, or ever will be the answer.

That's all it takes to change our world and make it become the most safest environment instead of it being switched around! It's just simple steps to becoming successful. Just know that this violence won't only affect you, but also it affects the people around you.
